The Cause of the Farmer's Poverty.

The history of American farming for twenty years is, in brief, that as the area in cultivation has increased, so has the product per capita, to be followed by ever-declining prices and diminishing returns per acre. If, in the period ending in 1874, with a cattle supply of 62 to 100 people, the supply of corn less than 25 bushels per capita, that of wheat and oats less than 65 bushels, and the domestic consumption of pork 75 pounds for each inhabitant, all the requirements of the people for bread, meat, spirits, and provender were fully and promptly met, it is quite apparent that, estimating consumption per capita as fifteen per cent greater than then, the present supply of beef is sufficient for 71,000,000 people; that of swine for 76,000,000; of wheat for 79,000,000; of corn for 70,500,000; and of oats for more than 100,000,000. The logical conclusion from the evidence offered, is that the troubles of the farmer are due to the fact that there are altogether too many farms, too many cattle and swine, too many bushels of corn, wheat, rye, oats, barley, buckwheat, and potatoes; too many tons of hay; and too great a production of nearly all other farm products for the number of consumers.—Writer in Forum.

Ten or a dozen men are engaged in surveying and examining the narrow gauge railroad, for just what purpose, your correspondent is unable to state, but suppose it is preparatory to widening the road to a standard gauge. When this is done and a road built from Salem via Aumsville, connecting with the O. P. at Mill City, we would not trade places with any little town in the Willamette valley.

J. F. Brown, of Salem, and his brother Harvey, of Spokane Falls, were visiting friends near here last week and taking in the old homestead where they spent their childhood's happy hours. J. F. has not forgotten how to enjoy the view of grouse from the top of a tall fir, but when it comes to getting over the fence with a gun—well, we won't give him away this time, if he will be more careful in the future.

Our good neighbor and minister, near Aie, had an appointment to preach, over in Linu county, last Sunday, but having failed to keep a correct count of the days of the week, when Sunday came he plowed until noon and then went to Stayton to do some trading and get his mail. Imagine his surprise when he found the business houses closed and the people attending church, seeing his mistake he hurried home to tell his good wife whom he had left scrubbing the floor and making preparations to accompany him the next day. We have agreed to keep quiet about the matter, therefore the readers of the JOURNAL will please say nothing about it where it will get out. We will not give his name for we are sure it will be a (Coke) day when he makes another such mistake.

The Essence of Christianity.

The teaching of Christ, the spirit of Christianity, seem to me very simple. They are that duty is love, that life is service, that every man is my brother, that God is the All-Father, and that he is cleansing, purifying, educating, developing, perfecting his children for a more harmonious life to come. We believe that Jesus Christ is the Son of God, because we believe he came from God, because in him there was, without dimness or darkness, that light of God some ray of which trembles in the darkest heart and life. We believe that he is the Savior of mankind, because we believe that through him mankind is coming to know God, to receive God, to live in and with God, to become sons of God. The Christian spirit is the spirit of loyalty to Christ; making Christianity not merely our creed, but our life; making our own duty love, our own life service, our neighbor our brother, and God, our Father, and finding in him the power to live this life of love and service which we believe is endless because it is divine. This faith wrought into the life of society would put an end to its discord; wrought into many a Christian household has made of them types of what all society might become, if it were recognized on the simple but radical principles of the Sermon on the Mount. It is the comfort of the sorrowing, the strength of the tempted, the peace of the tempest-tossed, the purifier of the sinful, the upholder and perfecter of the unfulfilled and immature. If one who does not know whether this faith is true or not attempts to take it from the world, he should consider seriously whether he has something better to bestow in its place.

—The Rev. Lyman Abbott, D. D., in North American Review for April.

Merit Wins.

We desire to say that for years we have been selling Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption, New Life Pills, Bucklen's Arnica Salve and Electric Bitters, and have never had a remedy that sell as well, or that have given such satisfaction.

We do not hesitate to guarantee them, and stand ready to refund the price, if satisfactory results do not follow their use. These remedies have won their popularity on their merits. Fry Druggist.

THE SHARK'S HABITS.

The Fish is a Great Coward in the Presence of Living Men.

The author of "On Blue Water," a man who had sailed much on tropical seas and had many opportunities for studying the nature and habits of fish, treats the common belief that the shark is a man-eater as a superstition. Man does not have his dwelling in the water, and it is only rarely that, by accident or design, he exposes himself to the attacks of the shark. It is not likely, therefore, that he was intended to be the natural and preferred food of the fish. The writer referred to above says that he had never conversed with any one who had seen a living man attacked by a shark. He gives an amusing account of a meeting between a black sailor and a shark, which makes it appear that this fish is a great coward in the presence of man.

His ship, an English one, was lying in Bombay harbor. An enormous white shark lay sluggishly on the surface of the water only a few feet from the ship's side. The sailors were making such remarks as "He's got his eye on us for supper," and when this opinion was doubted, they challenged the incredulous to put a foot in the water within the shark's reach.

A negro made a bet of a pound of tobacco that he would jump into the water just as he was. The bet was taken; and, without removing any of his clothing, the man jumped from the rail plump upon the monster's back. The fish was large enough to have swallowed two men, but his fright overcame any longing for human flesh. The narrator says:

"I have seldom seen any thing so scared as that shark was; he plunged off, half his body out of the water at times, leaving a wake like a paddle-boat behind him which could be traced for three or four hundred yards where he dived, and never showed himself alongside our ship again."

The instance would, perhaps, be met with the objection that sharks show a preference for white men to feed upon. This common notion has been adopted from observing that the colored South Sea Islanders spend much of their time in the water, wholly indifferent to the sharks which swim around them. If the shark is really partial to white victims, he probably selects them from sight, and not from taste.

When the shark gets a taste of human food, he no doubt experiences unusual delight, and from that time on is a ferocious man-hunter.

The case is much the same with the shark as with the tiger. Not one of a thousand of either of these creatures stands any chance of ever tasting human flesh, and before having done so they both stand in mortal fear of the face of man.

JUSTIFIABLE WRATH

A Pretty Girl Reporter's Experience with a Blundering Proof-reader.

"I've seen lots of male editors whose yearning dream was to shed some proof-reader's rich, red gore," said a newspaper friend to a Chicago Mail reporter, "but I never saw a woman on the rampage before. She was the acceper reporter on a paper I worked on out West. I must confess that the proof-reader was one of the worst of his class—dreaded in half strong enough. There wasn't a day but somebody's story wasn't made as silly as an end-man's joke by the proof-reader's blunders, and there was always somebody, from the city editor to the night policeman, who was looking for his scalp. I reckon he had a cave somewhere and that he hustled himself into it and locked himself in when the paper went to press and staid there till nightfall. Anyway, nobody could ever find him. But one night he got hold of an account of a swell reception—the highest social blow-out in town—for a new season. Every body was there in war paint, and the women who held family pur-strings were in their glory. Of course the paper did it up in great shape, and of course it fell to the fashion writer to describe the costumes. She threw herself, because it was a great chance, and was mighty proud of the column and a half description of the toilets she turned in. By way of saying 'You should have seen her when she appeared at the office the next afternoon and asked where she could find the proof-reader. She was white and red by turns, and spluttered so she could hardly talk straight. Every body gathered around her to learn what had happened, and she said:

"This St. Louis was the belle of that affair last night, and for several reasons, some of which are entirely personal. I took great care to describe her toilet accurately. I wrote, among other things, that she wore a wide antique collar and band cuffs, and here's the way that brute of a proof-reader fixed it:

"We looked at the line she pointed out and said that it credited the daughter of a rich man in that section of the country with wearing 'a snide antique collar and band cuffs.'"

"One by one we silently shook hands sympathizingly with the fashion reporter, and she took a hat-skewer from her pocket and braced out into the composing-room looking for the proof-reader. She didn't find him. I don't reckon she ever squared it with the girl."

A TRILLION KISSES.

How Long a Time This Osculation Extraordinary Would Take.

The case of the Florida man who had his love letters produced and read in court should touch other lovers moderation in the use of that word, even if this amount of Southerner should give the lady 15,000 kisses a minute (and we affirm that no person could hope to do more than that), and even if he could keep up this rate of osculation twenty-four hours a day, never pausing to eat, sleep or take breath, working 365 days every year, it would take him more than 100 years to complete the contract. And by that time, it is painful to reflect, the ardor of his love may have cooled. Even at the end of 100 years, counting 15,000 kisses a minute, there would remain an undelivered balance of more than 300,000,000,000, a number which in itself might well appal the most industrious.

We therefore feel constrained to advise writers of love letters not to undertake contracts of the magnitude of that reported from Florida.

An Old-Time Duel.

In the duel between De Witt Clinton and John Swartwout back of Waukegan, in 1829, Clinton hit Swartwout five times, and each time Swartwout demanded another shot. Once he was hit in the arm, then in the leg, then in the finger, and finally somewhere else; but, while struggling on the ground in great pain, he insisted that he should have another chance, though his antagonist was as yet uninjured. In view of such ridiculous persistency Mr. Clinton finally cast his pistol on the ground and walked off, with the remark that he had no patience with a man who did not know when either his wounded honor or his wounded body was satisfied.
